1. Introduction

- 1.1 On the 9th August 2006 Subject's mother, BM, contacted the police stating that she had harmed Subject by stabbing her. Subject was admitted to the North Devon District Hospital where it was confirmed that a total of 32 cuts or puncture wounds had been inflicted upon Subject, although none of them was found to be life threatening. Subject also had bruising of recent origin around the left knee and left elbow and forearm that were thought to be consistent with her having been restrained. Subject was also heavily infested with nits and lice.
- 1.2 Subject's mother, BM, previously being diagnosed as suffering from a mental illness, had expressed feelings that she might harm Subject on more than one occasion. Following the incident on the 9th August 2006 BM was arrested on suspicion of attempted murder but following further psychiatric assessment was detained under Section 2 of the Mental Health Act and placed in a secure psychiatric setting.
- 1.3 Subject has made a good physical recovery from the injuries that she sustained on the 9th August although she has been left with significant emotional and psychological difficulties. She has returned to the care of her father, Mr BF.

2. Terms of Reference

- 2.3 To confirm whether or not your agency was invited to attend the multi-agency meeting held on 30th June 2006 in relation to Subject. If so, your agency's understanding of the status of this meeting and the plan that followed from it.

4. Analysis

- 5.1 Sadly this Serious Case Review reflects themes from many others over the last 10 years. These are mainly based on communication, information sharing , thresholds, policies and procedures, accountability, responsibility and risk assessment.
- 5.2 There were many missed opportunities where earlier intervention may have made a difference to the protection Subject needed.
- 5.3 Had the risk to Subject been recognised following BM's admission to the hospital in January it may have resulted in a full assessment of BM's mental health problem and recognised the potential risk to Subject.
- 5.4 Information was shared with some agencies but not with others, for example the nursery where Subject spent 4 mornings a week. Had information been gathered in a more structured basis it might have been easier to recognise the potential risk to Subject from her mother.
- 5.5 Focus was lost on Subject and at times she did not seem to be considered. Within the multi-agency team the psychiatrists were ineffective in communicating clinical findings to the case holder, or to other agencies that were involved. They did not appear to be engaged in the process of multi-agency working, risk assessment or management.
- 5.6 The family actively sought out support but were not always responded to appropriately. They were reticent for CYPS to be involved. The husband could not be relied on to report an escalation of her behaviour. It was as if their co-operation with the other agencies e.g. Sure Start, health visiting service, GP, community mental health team and the nursery, reassured all these professionals that all was well within the family.
- 5.7 One of the main issues was the failure of the Children and Young Peoples' Service to accept the child protection referral. This left the community care worker with the burden of responsibility for managing the risk with inadequate information and support. From this point professionals were at a disadvantage as they seemed to lose sight of the main issue, the risk to Subject. They lost focus on the risk to Subject and focussed on parenting and Subject's behaviour management. They seemed unaware they could call a child protection case conference in their own right and also unaware of how they could escalate their concerns to senior managers. It is all credit to the community mental health worker that she decided to hold a professionals meeting as she obviously felt there was nowhere else to go. This decision although commendable reduced the level of concern especially for the social worker. As the child protection referral had not been accepted by the CYPS it reduced his concern and he did not appear to recognise the level of risk to Subject. He had little knowledge of the family and relied on those people who knew the family better therefore reducing his level of concern.

- 5.8 A chronology may have helped to focus on the family and the emerging risk.
- 5.9 No one appeared to take full responsibility for this case nor to make co-ordinated multi-agency response. There was evidence of some good multi agency working and a willingness to do so but not all information was shared with all agencies involved. It was felt that all the agencies were doing their best but were unable to focus on the most important issue, that of Subject's safety in conjunction with her mother's escalating mental health problems.
- 5.10 The historical risk factors were not known although mention was made to obtain her previous medical records on a number of occasions. Although weight has been put on the fact that having BM's previous mental health records may have alerted professionals to the risk factors there was obvious evidence of her immediate risk to Subject.
- 5.11 Clear lines and levels of communication and information sharing need to be developed between agencies working with children and families as per existing protocols.
- 5.12 Health Visitors and GP's need to speak to each other directly to share information on concerns about the well being of children and families.
- 5.13 GP practices should facilitate an appropriate response to invitations to attend child protection conferences and strategy meetings.

5. Conclusion

This family, in the care of multi agency services, tried to engage with services but was not heard. BM threatened to harm Subject on at least 10 occasions and still she was not protected. Focus was lost on Subject amidst BM's mental health problems; professionals failed to recognise the escalation and potential dangerousness of the mental health problems. The fact that BM's threats to harm Subject were not taken seriously and she was seen as a child in need and not a child in need of protection deflected and minimised professionals' view of the reality of the situation. No one took total responsibility for the assessment of the risk to Subject hence she got lost in the system. The whole case is a catalogue of missed opportunities although there are examples of good multi-agency working of dedicated professionals. Experience has shown that if a parent/carer with previous psychopathology threatens harm to a child there is increased risk compared to someone without that past history.

Although, the physical harm to Subject was minimal and she has made a full recovery from her physical injuries she has been left with significant emotional and psychological difficulties. Hard lessons will have been learnt without the loss of a young life.

It is a stark reminder that all agencies must remain child focussed at all times.

6. Recommendations: The following recommendations are accepted and endorsed

They are also part of the CAF programme and working within a clear outcomes framework

Northern Devon Healthcare NHS Trust

- 5.34 Consideration needs to be given to a "Safeguarding children check list" for all children attending the Accident and Emergency Department in line with threshold for referral

- 5.37 In all cases a 121'a must be submitted and the police should review its 121'a system to ensure appropriate data is captured and that there are systems in place for the dissemination of data to relevant agencies.
